Biographical Sketch

An educator, lecturer, political activist, and state legislator, Anita Lee Blair (1916-2011) advocated for safety and accident prevention, disability and women's rights, and transparency and accessibility in government. Blair was a freelance safety lecturer and spoke to various schools, factories, and civic groups all around the country from 1946-1950. Blair directed and wrote three safety films including A Day with Fawn. Blair was the only woman member of President Truman's Presidential Safety Advisory Council. Blair also helped reform the National Safety Council and advocated for safety legislation in Congress.

In 1952, Blair was elected to the Texas State House of Representatives (1953-1955). Blair was the first woman elected to the Texas State House of Representatives from El Paso. She was also the first blind woman to hold elected office in the United States. Blair was the second blind person elected from El Paso to the Texas State House of Representatives, after Dann Kirby who served from 1943-1947. Blair fought to improve conditions at the State School for the Deaf, co-sponsored an unsuccessful bill to allow women to serve on juries, and supported legislation to make jail time mandatory for drunk drivers. Blair opposed income and sales taxes, toll roads, and some anti-communist hunting legislation. Blair also supported increasing teachers' salaries. In 1954, Blair was joined by Maud Isaacks in the Texas House – the first time in the history of the Texas that two women represented the same district.

Blair was born in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, but was raised for most of her early years in El Paso, Texas. Blair was the oldest child of Clarence Morgan Blair and Jessie Hendricks. Blair's parental grandfather, Hartwell S. Blair, was an early member of the Oklahoma State Legislature. Blair's mother was a cousin of Thomas Hendricks who served as Vice-President of the United States under President Grover Cleveland. Blair graduated from Austin High School in 1933. Blair also attended Lamar School in El Paso and Alamogordo Junior High School. Blair earned a Bachelor's of Arts at UTEP in 1944 and a Master's degree in Political Science at UTEP in 1951. Blair lost her sight in a car accident in 1936. She was the first El Pasoan to have a seeing-eye dog, a German Shepard named Fawn who accompanied her in her travels. Blair, in her later years, was a frequent speaker in front of the El Paso City Council, the County Commissioner's Court and the School Board. Blair's last run for political office was in 2002 for the position of El Paso County Judge. On November 8, 2008, the El Paso City Council declared November 8 "Anita Blair Day".

Series Description or Arrangement

Series I: Biographical Information

Series II: Safety Lecturer Career

Series III. Legislative and Political Career

Scope and Content Notes

The Anita Lee Blair papers date 1944-2011, bulk 1946-1953. Types of records include photographs, correspondence, clippings, publications, scrapbooks, books, and other printed materials. Arranged in three series (Biographical Information, Safety Lecturer Career, and Legislative and Political Career), these papers document Blair's life and career as a Texas state legislator and as a freelance safety lecturer. The papers also document her involvement in political causes, such as transparency and accountability in local government and the annexation of Lower Valley El Paso. The Biographical Information series covers Blair's life and includes correspondence, photographs, articles about her and her family, and other materials. The Safety Lecturer Career series documents her time as a freelance national safety lecturer who traveled around the country speaking about accident prevention to different groups, including schoolchildren. This series contains correspondence, photographs, scrapbooks, newspaper clippings, personnel records, financial records, and other materials. The Legislative and Political Career series covers Blair's time as a member of the Texas State House of Representatives in the 1950s. This series includes correspondence, books, photographs, and other materials.
