Biography or Historical Sketch

Born in Toledo, Ohio, Henry Charles Trost (1860-1933) was an architect who designed hundreds of buildings and residences in El Paso, Albuquerque, Tucson, and other southwestern cities. Trost moved to El Paso, Texas in 1903 after living in Tucson, Arizona and forming the firm of Trost and Rust there. After Robert Rust's death in 1905, Henry Trost established the Trost and Trost architectural firm in El Paso with his brother, Gustavus Adolphus Trost, also an architect. In 1908 Gustavus's twin brother, Adolphus Gustavus Trost, joined the firm and worked as a structural engineer.

During the early twentieth century, Trost designed buildings in several architectural styles including: Art Deco, Mission Revival, Prairie, and Pueblo Revival. Additionally, he designed several buildings for the Texas State School of Mines and Metallurgy (now the University of Texas at El Paso) in the Bhutanese Dzong style. He was influenced by Louis Sullivan and Frank Lloyd Wright and also became known for his ornamental metal work and designs. Henry Trost created buildings specifically for what he termed "arid America."
